Guardianship is typically established through a legal process that involves a petition to the court, an evaluation of the individual's capacity, and a determination of the need for guardianship. The court will appoint a guardian who is responsible for acting in the best interests of the individual under their care.

Capacity

Capacity refers to an individual's ability to make and communicate informed decisions about their own life and affairs. In the context of guardianship, capacity is assessed by considering factors such as the individual's cognitive abilities, understanding, and judgment.

Conservatorship

Conservatorship is a legal arrangement similar to guardianship, but it is typically used in cases where an individual needs assistance with managing their financial affairs but retains some capacity to make personal decisions.

Estate Planning

Estate planning involves making arrangements for the management and distribution of an individual's assets after their death. In cases involving individuals with disabilities, estate planning can be particularly important to ensure that their needs are met and their wishes are respected.

Guardianship of the Person

Guardianship of the person refers to the authority to make decisions about an individual's personal care, including their living arrangements, medical treatment, and social activities.

Guardianship of the Estate

Guardianship of the estate refers to the authority to manage an individual's financial affairs, including their income, expenses, and investments.

Least Restrictive Alternative

The least restrictive alternative principle requires that the court consider and select the least restrictive form of guardianship that is appropriate to meet the individual's needs. This principle aims to preserve the individual's autonomy and rights to the greatest extent possible.

Probate Court

Probate court is the court that handles matters related to wills, estates, and guardianships. In most jurisdictions, probate courts are responsible for appointing guardians and overseeing the administration of guardianships.

Self-Determination

Self-determination refers to an individual's right to make their own decisions and choices, even if those decisions are not considered to be in their best interests. Guardianship should be established in a way that respects and promotes the individual's self-determination to the extent possible.

Supported Decision-Making

This approach emphasizes the individual's autonomy and their right to participate in their own care and decision-making.
