Historical Patterns of Violence

The Western state system emerged from the ashes of the Roman Empire, a period marked by widespread violence and conflict. The rise of feudalism and the subsequent development of nation-states led to a new era of violence, as states competed for territory, power, and resources. The Thirty Years' War (1618-1648) was one of the most devastating conflicts in European history, killing an estimated 8 million people. The Napoleonic Wars (1792-1815) and the First World War (1914-1918) were other major conflicts that shaped the history of the Western state system.

In the twentieth century, the world witnessed the rise of totalitarianism and the horrors of the Holocaust. The Cold War (1945-1991) was a period of intense rivalry between the United States and the Soviet Union, marked by the threat of nuclear war. The post-Cold War era has seen a rise in non-state violence, including terrorism and civil wars.
